Bart Ah You has been a photojournalist with the Modesto Bee for 24 years. Bart is one of the four photographers for The Bee. He received his degree in journalism from San Jose State.

Bart gave us a slide show of a selection of his photos, which contained impressive photographic prints.

Bart says that when digital cameras appeared, he gave up his film cameras immediately. He knew with time digital would be state of the art. Digital allows him to have his photos online in five minutes. When The Bee went online, Bart learned the art of video journalism, as well. Bart says that when he shoots still photos, he can work at a fast pace.

Switching to video means slowing down and having patience to finish each shot. Bart gave us a photography tip: the Rule of Thirds. The concept is to split your viewfinder into 9 squares, with two imaginary lines running horizontally and two vertically. He recommends you place your photo subject off center. Further, because in Western culture we read from left to right, he recommends the subject run through the frame of the viewfinder from the lower left-hand corner to the upper right-hand corner. Thanks, Bart!
